

Stephen Deane
Investor Engagement Advisor
Office of the Investor Advocate
U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission

Stephen Deane is the Investor Engagement Advisor in the Office of the Investor Advocate at the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. He is the office lead on accounting and auditing issues and combatting elderly financial abuse. Areas of focus also include corporate governance, proxy voting, the use of structured data, and the manner of delivery and presentation of annual reports and other corporate disclosures. He manages professional relationships for the Investor Advocate and serves as the main staff liaison to the SEC Investor Advisory Committee.

Prior to joining the SEC in 2011, Stephen was vice president at Institutional Shareholder Services (ISS), RiskMetrics Group and MSCI. He was the founding director of ISS's Center for Corporate Governance.

Stephen speaks fluent Russian, worked at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and, for eight subsequent years, led assistance initiatives for the former Soviet Union at the Center for International Private Enterprise (CIPE) in Washington, D.C.

Stephen received a Bachelor's in Liberal Arts (Great Books Program) from St. John's College and a Master's in Soviet Studies from Harvard University. Alas, he has no degree from Yale – but his wife does (Judy Meyer Deane, MA, Russian and East European Studies).
